Market and Portfolio Developments

Market Review

Markets seemed to be taking inflationary concerns well, being in a risk-on mode in June. Global equities were up 1.35%, with energy and technology sectors leading the charge. Unhedged global investment grade bonds resumed their downtrend with losses of 0.88% in the month, as markets continue to tussle with the low interest rate environment.

Main contributors “What did well?”

Our US small-cap position (recovery theme) saw strong gains in June after underperforming in May - we continue to favour US small-caps as they trade at a discount to large-caps, and are expected to grow their earnings more quickly alongside the recovering economy. Healthcare (stability theme) also delivered positive returns as different segments took turns to lead over the past month.

Main detractors “What underperformed?”

China ‘A’ underperformed, continuing with their recent weakness. Despite valuations being more attractive relative to developed markets, China’s economic activity has moderated somewhat as policy makers withdrew some of the earlier ‘crisis stimulus’. We have been closely monitoring developments here and look to adjust our allocations as we identify more attractive opportunities.

Portfolio activity

Activity was kept minimal, which allowed the portfolio to benefit from market gains.

Market outlook

As we track the global recovery into the second half of 2021, we are likely observe a different pace of reopening across regions in part due to the varying speed of vaccine rollout. However, it is not so simple to just invest where the virus is largely under control, as many of these markets are already pricing in a recovery. Our process allows us to hone in on areas with more favourable tailwinds; in particular segments of the market with more room to recover and with good ‘FVT’.
