Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

Asian equities ended June lower with declines of 5.74% amid mounting investor fears about the possibility of a global recession triggered by aggressive policy tightening by the Fed and other major central banks to control inflation. Bucking the regional trend, China equities were helped by improving production and consumption activities alongside the country's pro-growth stance.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

China equities contributed positively to performance as investors' sentiments were buoyed by easing regulatory crackdowns and Covid quarantine restrictions. What we did not invest in also helped with relative performance. Our FVT (Fundamental, Valuation, Technical) process leads us away from areas that are deemed to have poorer risk/reward. By doing so, we avoided a number of 'pricier' tech stocks that fell sharply in the past month, such as Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company (TSMC), which declined 16.67%.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

Small-cap equities detracted from performance amid projections of economic slowdowns sparked by fears of recessions. We remain confident that attractive valuations would eventually pave the way to better return over a market cycle.

Market Outlook

High levels of inflation and tightening financial conditions have led many to predict an oncoming recession, but experienced investors know that such is the ebb and flow of the market cycle that rewards patience and preparation rather than timing market entries and exits. The broader Asian region continues to be a compelling long-term investment at better valuations where consumption activities are expected to rebound.
