Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

Asian equities declined as investor risk appetite remained subdued amid high inflation, Fed rate hikes, and persistent worries over a global recession. New COVID-19 flare-ups in the region (such as China and Japan) also weighed in on its growth outlook. In China, investors' sentiment was dampened in light of tightening COVID restrictions and geopolitical uncertainties. However, the best investment opportunities often present themselves in the bleakest of times.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

Our decision to underweight less attractively valued (more expensive) areas such as Taiwan and Korea contributed positively to performance. They highlight the importance of our Fundamental, Valuation, and Technicals (FVT) approach in selecting investments with a good risk-to-reward and margin of safety.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

Overall, Chinese equities detracted as a result of the aforementioned factors. With that said, our single holdings, such as Alibaba and Tencent, have become more attractively valued and present greater upside potential at current price levels.

Portfolio Activity

Amid market volatility, the focus was on maintaining the integrity of our portfolio allocations.

Market Outlook

With the global recession on the minds of investors, it is easy to see how one might be convinced to sell out. But, as history has shown, such declines are rare opportunities for long-term investors to earn a better return going forward. Seasoned investors would know that investors in Chinese equities would have to experience four separate declines of more than 30% over the past 20-year period in order to gain an above-average return. Hence the saying investment is more temperament than intellect.
