Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

October came as a relief after two consecutive months of market declines as global equities rallied by 6.06%, However, for most investors, the narrative was still one of tougher and more volatile times ahead, as news of slower growth across economies and additional rate hikes made headlines.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

US Small-Cap equities contributed positively to returns; they maintain better upside potential with good margin-of-safety as compared to their large-caps counterparts. Similarly, Healthcare equities (inclusive of Biotech) contributed positively amid economic uncertainties, in line with their more defensive nature.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

China 'A' equities underperformed as Covid-19 restrictions and tensions with the US continued to weigh on performance alongside uncertainties over President Xi tighter hold on the country.

Portfolio Activity

We consolidated Quality Value equities into a larger Healthcare allocation. They offer us a more resilient way to invest amid current market volatility with better prospects for outperformance in the event of a prolonged economic downturn.

Market Outlook

As market volatility persists, it is not uncommon to observe investors selling and/or restricting their buying activities to avoid discomfort. But in doing so, investors lose the chance to achieve higher-than-average returns as selling incurs permanent losses and forgoing the opportunity to accumulate units at lower-than-average prices. Volatility can be unpleasant, but they are there to help opportunistic investors get better returns over the long-run.
