Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

2022 ended on a sour note for investors as global equities saw a decline of 3.91% in December. The challenging market conditions, brought about by issues such as inflation, interest rate hikes, and concerns about a recession, led to poor performance for equities in 2022; with year-to-date returns of -17.69%. Amid such a backdrop, the traditional "60/40" equity/bond portfolio did not provide much resilience (like it once did) as both asset classes declined in lock-step.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

Emerging Markets and China 'A' equities continued to contribute positively to performance as investors grow more optimistic about China's economic recovery and the end of its Covid Zero Policy. Similarly, European equities performed amid hopes that cooling inflation pave way for a less hawkish central bank.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

US Small-caps detracted from performance but remained relatively resilient throughout the year compared to their large "blue-chip" counterparts. Looking ahead, their attractive valuations are expected to help them perform better when markets recover. Biotech equities lagged but remain an important diversifier of return during times of uncertainty.

Market Outlook

As we enter 2023, it is common to see predictions about recessions and market declines. However, predictions are at best false comfort – it is difficult to accurately (and consistently) predict what could unfold. Instead of relying on predictions, it is better to be prepared. One way is to ensure proper diversification, just like a football team needs both scoring and defending players. Today, our portfolio comprises recovery-themed positions that are expected to perform well during market recoveries and stability-themed positions that can provide downside protection amid volatility. Investing in the market is one of the best ways to grow long-term wealth, but not all will have the patience to realize them.
