Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

2023 started with robust market performance. Asia ex Japan equities recorded a positive performance of 8.63% in January. The lifting of China's zero-Covid policy in December, which have constrained the country's economic growth for years, helped to drive this growth. This was coupled with an overall risk-on appetite as many investors anticipate slower rate hikes as inflation cools. Those who had stayed out of the markets, fearing that markets would have tanked further following December's decline, would have missed out on these gains – emotions tend to get in the way of successful investing.

Main Contributors 'What did well?'

China 'A' equities contributed positively to performance on loosening Covid-19 restrictions and continued government measure to support the country's property market. South Korea and Taiwan equities also witnessed significant growth which contributed to the portfolio's performance.

Main Detractors 'What underperformed?'

India equities was the only market to end January in negative territory after a period of solid growth.

Market Outlook

Should investors expect the current market rally to continue in the coming months? Just as likely as markets may continue to rise it may also quickly reverse. Such is the nature of markets: no one knows exactly where they are headed in the short run. Instead, we focus on fundamentals and valuations to invest in areas where we are confident can deliver strong returns over a longer time-horizon. This is why our portfolio is currently positioned in such opportunities like China which are expected to lead markets in the next cycle.
