Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

The performance of the S&P 500 and Nasdaq took center stage in recent weeks, with a narrow rally driven by mega-cap tech stocks like Alphabet, Amazon, Apple, Meta, Microsoft, NVIDIA, and Tesla - commonly referred to as the Magnificent 7. This rally contributed to the outsized performance in those indices for the first half of 2023, sparking renewed optimism that markets may have overcome previous challenges. While recovery may very well be underway, history has shown that narrow rallies are short-lived – the current winners make way for other segments to do well.

Main Contributors ‘What did well?’

US small-caps equities extended their gains for the month. They present much further upside compared to their large-cap counterparts in a true recovery; history points towards outperformance of over 30% on average. Additionally, Healthcare equities also contributed positively to the portfolio’s overall performance.

Main Detractors ‘What underperformed?’

Performance for China ‘A’ equities lagged. While China’s post-reopening recovery has been softer than many had anticipated, a gradual recovery is happening. This contrasts with other major economies like the US or Europe which are in a late-cycle and heading into a recession. This makes our China positions a useful diversifier in the portfolio, not to mention good recovery play going forward.

Market Outlook

While markets rallied, concerns about an upcoming recession persisted as investors remained focused on the pace of Fed rate hikes and inflation. In fact, a recession is almost certain to happen, as economies normalize after the supernormal growth observed after the Covid recovery. The question arises: should investors adopt a passive “wait-and-see” approach and enter the market only when the recession past? The past few months show that markets can still deliver positive gains amid such worries.

Our portfolio combination of recovery and stability ensures that we can be resilient as economies continue to adjust to tighter policy while maintaining good potential for returns in the eventual recovery. Now more than ever, it is important to be selective. The stocks that have seen strong gains in recent weeks tend to have sky-high valuations and poor risk-reward as they are prone to sharp declines. We remain committed to investing only in areas with good risk-reward so that our investors can secure returns over their medium-long term investment time horizon.
