Market & Portfolio Developments

Market Review

The previous narrow market rally driven by Alphabet, Amazon, Apple, Meta, Microsoft, NVIDIA, and Tesla (known as the 'Magnificent 7') broadened out in July. This is in line with historical patterns which indicate that narrow rallies do not continue for long.

We hold none of the seven stocks in our portfolio today, as studies suggest they are like a stretched spring coil prone to a 'snap back'. At the very least, it is likely that they would lag in a broad recovery; which was what happened in the last month.

On the other hand, our recovery positions i.e. US small-caps, Emerging Markets, and China 'A' equities resemble a compressed coil. With the broadening of the rally, they've been showing signs of releasing its pent-up energy. This can be particularly strong in the beginning of the recovery; and why we avoid timing so close to such inflection points.

- Small-caps tend to outperform large-caps meaningfully in the recovery phase. This favorable risk-reward set-up reflected by its top weight in our portfolio.
- China 'A' have posted sharp rebounds after similar challenging periods in the past. Recent shift in tone by policymakers have also been supportive for the market.

As we approach potential inflection points in the economy, our strategy continue to focus on stability to ride through short-term challenges while capturing the medium to long-term return potential of markets. Additionally, we remain flexible to seize opportunities should the environment shift unexpectedly.
